

Hi Shelby,

Halloween, step aside. The legal marketer's "scary season" is already well upon us. We are officially deep into Chambers season.

Never fear, my friends. Reputation Ink's legal rankings expert, Shelby Gambrell, is here to remind you of some best practices to make the strongest case possible for your firm. Read Shelby's post by clicking below.

Until next time, happy marketing!

Michelle

Are ads and 'paid profiles' in legal directories worth it?

While I see value in many legal awards and rankings programs, especially those with advertising-independent research processes and those done by credible media outlets, I see no value in buying advertising (including display ads and "enhanced profiles") in any legal directories out there. Here's why.

According to five general counsel at the Legal Marketing Association's 2018 annual conference, the most effective way for law firms to get their attention is through high-quality, relevant and timely thought leadership content, in the form of client alerts, helpful articles and speeches. Chambers rankings are used as reference check, verification tool and tie-breaker.

OUR CLIENTS IN THE NEWS

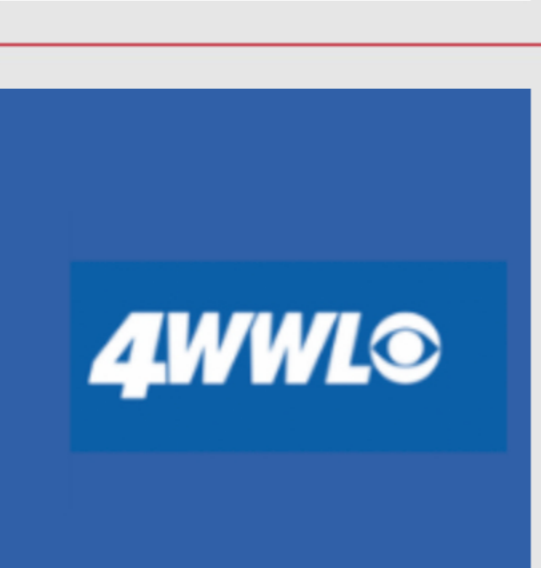

We achieve media coverage for our law firm clients every day, helping them build credibility and generate demand for their services.

This past month, we were honored to assist the Lamothe Law Firm in raising awareness about Louisiana's House Bill 492, which went into effect on August 1. The new law provides a three-year window for victims of child sexual and physical abuse to file claims, even if the statute of limitations has expired.

New Orleans sex abuse survivor thought he'd never get chance at lawsuit before this rule change

The Lamothe Law Firm filed the first child sexual abuse claims under Louisiana's House Bill 492, representing client John Lousteau in his case against Brothers of The Holy Cross Schools.
